I have seen so many different ways to generate random numbers in C++ and I am not sure if any of them can be used in python. Can someone please let me know how to generate a large random number (say 16 digit number) in C++ and then convert it to an int and use it in python? A: One thing you could do is the following, and similar techniques are used in many libraries such as c++, python, Java and so on. Generate a random number, which is larger than the desired one and then mod it by 10, which makes your number random enough. For example: int get_random_number() { unsigned long long int random_seed = 0; srand(random_seed); unsigned long int random_number = 0; while(random_number
