The tag is only for xsl:for-each. I cannot offer an alternative solution, but here are some thoughts that might be helpful: Is there a really good reason why you need to do this in XSLT? How about working within the DOM API? You need a container for the xsl:value-of, i.e. Are you considering multiple instances of the same thing? What's new:

The #1 international fast-growing role-playing game Android, Successful mobile MMORPGs all contain very different game genres as well as complicated mechanics. This is especially true for the fast-growing fantasy role-playing game genre. Unlike other ARPGs, traditional fantasy MMORPGs require several days to generate a full road which many are unable to complete. For example, Type-1 action MMORPGs based on dungeon battles, many of them have been reviewed. Users can explore dungeons to acquire the magic, equipment, and ability; subsequently they rise to reach the upper levels of the dungeon through clearing the dungeons; finally, the two players face off in a dungeon chamber and use their magic and weapons to defeat the enemy. If this scenario is the goal, there is still a problem with dungeon battles in a traditional fantasy MMORPG. The rate of battles is very low because there are usually several to ten players at the same time. We choose the number of players that enter at the same time to explore the difficulty of dungeon encounters. In the traditional fantasy MMORPGs, we aim for a minimum of 5 players. These battles require only ten minutes; it allows players who can not complete the whole five days of a completed dungeon; apparently, this is one of the reasons the game does not obtain the ranking of the 600 players in the world ranking. This is also the shortcoming of general fantasy role-playing games. When the process of Dungeon Boss and monster hunting in a traditional fantasy role-playing game happens, most of the dungeon areas are the same and similar to each other; therefore, users do not have to clear similar areas repeatedly. Each time they meet a boss, new battlegrounds. There are also other ways to balance the game, most of them are to increase the cost of items, a method that has been used from the beginning. However, in our game, our focus is to enhance the freedom of choice and the activities that customers desire. Type-2 and Type-3 games are fast-paced MMORPGs that contain a lot of dungeon combat. The reason why people play this game is to use the skill system to spend their time efficiently. In this setting, players don't have to enter the dungeons every day, but as players become stronger, they can enter new dungeons that reach the high level, and get more rewards than the previous dungeon, thus achieving flexibility.
