The real..The latest chapter in Washington's status quo legislative battle to roll back women's reproductive health freedom was unveiled just in time to be attached to an appropriations bill. The Trump administration, in response to mounting questions about the potential impact on the President's own health care plan, sought to add a provision to the HHS appropriations bill that would ban people from using federal tax money to receive abortions, even in cases of rape and incest. In a power grab that would lead to higher costs for many women, the rule would also ban federal employee health plans from offering health care coverage for abortion in many cases. If this rule had been implemented, it would have been on top of the rule the Trump administration floated recently that blocked Planned Parenthood from funding and exchanging information between health care providers. The rules are not only unjust; they are also likely to go unchallenged as
